FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Water Company Vitens, the Netherlands, purchases Spatial Workshop to spatially enable its office employees

September 10, 2008

Company: Spatial Eye

Industry: Business GIS, Internet/Web Mapping/Web Services, Business Intelligence, Geospatial Technology, Location Intelligence

Location: Culemborg, The Netherlands

Spatial Eye announces that Vitens, the largest water distribution company in the Netherlands, purchased Spatial Workshop to give more than two hundred employees access to spatial information within their Smallworld Geographic Information Systems.

Spatial Workshop will give users in the office direct and integrated access to:

- the network infrastructure data within the Network Resource Manager (NRM) systems, a Smallworld GIS application,
- data within spreadsheets,
- sketches stored in the Oracle based Diasys system and other sources,
- related documents in MS Office, DXF, DWG, PDF and other formats,
- background data in raster format

Spatial Workshop will give users access to critical business functionality within other systems through integration services into Spatial Workshop, like:

- Leakage and failure detection and tracing of affected customers,
- Changing the status of valves,
- And searching addresses through integration of Google search functionality

Spatial Workshop will be employed within a Citrix based Local Area Network.

"The move to Spatial Workshop fits perfectly with our goal to empower our employees by offering them visually compelling location-based applications that allow them to use data and functionality at the location and time that they need it.

With Spatial Workshop we can now enable our employees with data, without the need for support by specialists to unlock data that was hidden within our GIS and other IT-systems in the past." said Wybren de Jong from Vitens.
